STATEHOOD REFERENDUM.

A splendid solution of the statehood problem is offered in the amendment proposed by Senator Foraker to the joint statehood bill. The amendment provides that the question of coalition shall be presented to the people of Arizona and New Mexico. In the event that a majority of the voters of both territories, not a majority on joint ballot, as it were, is favorable to joint statehood, then the two territories are to be admitted as one state.

Proponents of joint statehood have insisted, in the face of overwhelming evidence to the contrary, that a majority of the people of Arizona want to come into the union in conjunction with New Mexico. These gentlemen cannot object to the Foraker amendment. If they have a majority they will be able to demonstrate it easily enough. The same thing is true of those who oppose joint statehood.

The latter say, and disinterested observers agree with them, that three fourths of the voters of Arizona would rather stay out of the Union for an indefinite period than come in with New Mexico. If this is true and the people vote according to their alleged convictions, joint statehood will be defeated.

Senator Beveridge, chairman of the committee on territories, is reported to be favorable to the referendum plan. He thinks, however, that a majority of all votes cast should decide the question. This proposition is not considered fair by Senator Foraker. It is pointed out that the people of New Mexico are solidly in favor of joint statehood. They could muster enough votes to overcome almost any adverse majority in Arizona.

Obviously the only fair way is to require a majority of the individual voters of the territories. Otherwise Arizona might be forced into an utterly and undesirable combination, if Congress is really sincere in its expressed desire to deal fairly by these territories, it will adopt the Foraker amendment.
